LAUREN LEE

Lauren Lee is a forward-thinking vocalist, pianist, and composer based in New York City. A native of the St. Louis (MO) metropolitan area, her foray into creative music began as a teenager in the St. Louis Symphony Chorus, an experience that led her on a wild goose chase of sorts to find her own sound in the adventurous music scene as a young innovator in a special brand of improvisation she calls “Vocal Instrumentalism”.

What does music mean for you?

Music is the thing I think about most, so it is very important to me. It's not just my job, it is my first love and passion.

What is music?

Music is a reflection of tactile and emotional experiences that have been collected and rearranged as sounds, either premeditated or improvised. Music is universal and speaks to all languages and states of being.

What made you a musician?

I became a musician because I cannot imagine being anything else. It encompasses all my interests (science, math, traveling) and allows me to constantly be creative.

Did music change your life for the better?

Music absolutely changed my life and continues to change my life. The more I explore the boundaries of what I can achieve through music, the better my life becomes.
